

Lewis Power QC Meets with University of Nevada, Las Vegas To Discuss Innovative Masters Programme in Gaming Law

Over the past week, Lewis Power QC has been representing the Church Court International Law Team across the pond. Mr. Power QC met with Dr. Brian Wall (Assistant Dean) and Ms. Sarah Gonzales (Director of Graduate Programs) of the William S. Boyd School of Law at University of Nevada, Las Vegas to discuss their LL.M. In Gaming Law Programme. The programme seeks to offer invaluable insight into the multi-billion-dollar industry of Global Gaming, preparing individuals for the technological advancements of online gaming and creating lasting professional connections.

Based in the thriving metropolis of Las Vegas, the school is the first in the United States to offer such a unique programme and continues to receive national accreditation. Most recently, the law school's Lawyering Process Programme was ranked first in the U.S. among the top legal writing programmes. Furthermore, the school has reached its highest ever ranking in U.S. accredited law schools – a meteoric rise which truly reflects the faculty's dedication to modern teaching in the traditional field of law.

Mr. Power QC believes that it is important now more than ever for barristers to engage in the rapidly developing area of Gaming Law. The Gambling Act of 2005 brought significant changes to the United Kingdom's gambling laws in the face of an up-and-coming internet gaming sector. It also created the Gambling Commission which is responsible for the regulation and supervision of gaming law across Great Britain.

Church Court Chambers members have specific expertise in matters such as match fixing, sports integrity and regulatory law.

Mr Power QC would like to especially thank Dr Brian Wall for his kindness and hospitality throughout the visit and for the courtesy extended by Dean Hamilton and his staff. It is hoped that Mr Power QC will address students at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas in the foreseeable future.
