About

Paul is a London-based barrister with over 20 years of experience specialising in serious crime. He has built a strong reputation for his calm, measured approach and his ability to remain composed in the most demanding circumstances. Widely recognised as an excellent communicator, Paul ensures that clients feel supported, informed, and reassured throughout every stage of their case. His meticulous preparation and client-focused outlook mean he is always committed to achieving the very best outcomes. Paul has particular expertise in cases involving firearms, ballistic evidence, and scientific analysis, as well as fraud matters involving real property. His detailed knowledge of mobile phone data and cell site analysis has been instrumental in securing successful results in complex and technical trials. He is also highly experienced in cases involving allegations of murder and attempted murder, serious violence, drugs supply, all complex fraud and serious sexual offences. Alongside his criminal practice, Paul is frequently instructed in challenging family law matters, especially those with a mental health dimension. His sensitive yet robust handling of vulnerable clients and witnesses has earned him the trust of both lay and professional clients. Paul is accredited by the Bar Council to undertake Direct Access work.
